Dear Schaun and Kristiana,

Too often in the business world, you get too busy with your own issues, problems and opportunities to say thanks for a job well done. This is not the first time Bob Herstein has analyzed a foundation for my client's home they are considering purchasing. Every time, Bob makes the people feel confident about the plan, no matter what. Bob is not only expert at what he does, but has a way of explaining things that people understand and appreciate, and moreover they also believe it is the truth.

Recently, my client made an offer on a great home in the Lake Ridge area of Cedar Hill. This is an area known for big wonderful houses and foundation problems. These people loved the house but were concerned so, on their own, they called a very well known foundation repair company who analyzed the home and stated it needed $8,800 foundation work performed on the house due to some irregular measurements. I suggested we call Integrated Foundation, requesting for Bob Herstein to take a look. Bob took many measurements, and concluded the house did not need work. Walking with us in and around the house, pointing out very little or no stress areas, etc, Bob's reasoning the house was probably "just poured that way", and that there was nothing for him to fix. My buyer's were very confused with the two dramatically different findings. I arranged to have one of the area's finest and most experienced engineers that specialize in foundation examinations to analyze the home. Without any knowledge of each other's findings, and after many measurements and observations, the engineer concluded exactly the same results as Bob.

I am sure Foundation Companies will always do well in this area of North Texas, but if they want repeat business, word of mouth sales, or unsolicited recommendations, they will hire individuals with outstanding professionalism but more over with integrity beyond reproach like Bob Herstein.

Respectfully and Sincerely,

Jack Corpier
